The National Statistical Coordination Board reports that as of 2006 the life expectancy of Filipino men at birth is 66.1 and women — 71.6. For a country with 100 million people, only a tiny fraction of the Philippine population lives to 100 years old. Based on a 2010 census released by the National Statistics Office, the estimated number of Filipinos who have lived over 100 is 8,000 or .008 percent.

Living to a hundred years old is a rarity in this day and age. With the modern lifestyle and ways of many Filipinos, maintaining a healthy and active life has become a challenge. Illnesses and diseases associated with modern lifestyle cause death. And based on an article written by Bernard Choi in the J Epidemiol Community Health 2005, the “human race will be pushed towards a primary cause of death from ‘diseases of comfort’ (such as those chronic diseases caused by obesity and physical inactivity), due to technological advance.”

It is the intention of the bill therefore to provide incentives to the Filipino centenarians and to honor individuals who have lived to a hundred and over, considering that this event is in fact a reason for great celebration. Government should lead the country in paying respect to Filipino centenarians and according them the necessary assistance they need. With the dwindling centenarian population in the country, the living to a hundred years is a milestone worth celebrating.

Hence, the passage of this measure is earnestly sought.
